THE PEACE ESTABLISHMENT.

THE Army Bill, as it now comes before the House for action, is a measure to "increase and fix the "military peace establishment" of the United States -a precise and significant title. The increase, however, is, after all, to be a very moderate one, considering the position which this country is now forced to assume in the community of nations. The proposed military force is to consist chiefly of sixty-seven regiments-fifty of infantry, twelve of cavalry, and five of artillery; a body of Indian scouts, to be used in the Territories, not exceeding one thousand, with the pay and allowances of cavalry; and a Volunteer Militia of about three hundred thousand strong, one regiment being formed in each Congressional district, each Territory, and in the District of Columbia. This we say is the force which the Military Committee proposes; how far the programme will meet the approval of Congress remains to be seen, in the fate of the Army Bill, the Militia Bill, and the West Point Bill. Of course, the chief available portion of this force is designed to be the Regular Army.

There are many points of interest in the new Bill, as it handsomely passed the Senate. The probabilities are that it will be thoroughly reviewed, perhaps much modified, in the House. But, for the mere sake sake of convenience, we will discuss it as if its mein provisions would stand. The organizations in each of the three arms are, after much discussion, to remain substantially the same as at present. The artillery is to contain five regiments, as at present, but all organized on the basis of the Fifth artillery; it being provided, in all three arms, that the adjutant, quartermaster, and commissary shall hereafter be extra first or second lieutenants. The cavalry is to be doubled, but its regimental organizations are to remain the same. Four companies, however, in each regiment may be armed and drilled as infantry, at the discretion of the President-an indefinite and not entirely systematic proviso. Two of the new cavalry regiments, as the Bill now stands, are to be composed of black troops. We presume that this provision may elicit discussion in the House. It is proposed to use these troops chiefly on the frontier. How the red men and the black will get along together, we shall discover in due time; but it is pitting color against color with a vengeance. What can be affirmed is that two firstclass regiments of colored cavalry could be raised, so far as horsemanship goes; and, doubtless, as far as all soldierly deportment and character go. Each cavalry regiment will have but one hospital steward. The fifty infantry regiments are to have, as we have said, the old ten-company, single-battalion organizations. The ten 10-company regiments will, of course, continue the same. The other nine will be so distributed that each battalion, increased by two new companies, will form a regiment. And, besides, thirteen new regiments are to be raised—eight of them colored. Each company will have a captain, first and second lieutenant, a first sergeant, four sergeants, eight corporals, two artificers, two musicians, one wagoner, and fifty privates. But the number of privates may be doubled, on exigency, at the discretion of the PRESIDENT. This last is the elastic feature of the organization, and is worthy of special attention. The fixing of one hundred as the possible increase of the number of privates is rather remarkable. We should have supposed it would have been put at eighty. The field and staff are to remain as usual in the single-battalion regiments, except as we have noticed in the provision for the commissary, adjutant and quartermaster, who are to be extra lieutenants.

The other details of the proposed organization are less remarkable, and we can easily condense the chief points. In the first place, there are to be, of general officers, as at present, one lieutenant-general, five major-generals, and 'ten brigadier-generals, with the same pay, emoluments and staff as now. It will be perceived, therefore, that no effort has yet been made to introduce the grade of general—a question so much discussed. The probabilities are that the rank will not be made, as a part, at least, of the present meas-It would require a proportionate increase of lieutenant-generals, and in every way would inflate the military expenses, without necessity, in time of peace. However, the question may come up in the House, out of design to honor General GRANT. The Adjutant-General's Department is, in a single word, to be organized with precisely its present authorized force. There are to be four inspector-generals and eight assistants—the former having the rank, pay, and emoluments of colonels of cavalry, and the latter of lieutenant-colonels. In the Quartermaster's Department, the act passed about two years ago for the improvement of its organization, is to be continued only a year after the passage of the present bill. The permanent organization, under the Quartermaster-General, will embrace three chief-assistant, four assistant, and eight deputy quartermaster-generals with the respective rank, pay, and emoluments of brigadier-general, and colonel and lieutenant-colonel; sixteen quartermasters, with the rank, etc., of majors of cavalry, and forty assistant-quartermasters with the rank, etc., of captains of cavalry. The military storekeepers are henceforth to have the rank, pay and emoluments of a captain of cavalry. The Subsistence Department will continue with its present organization. Line officers detailed and approved as quartermasters or commissaries of regiments, permanent posts, or commands of more than two companies, will receive $10 per month extra pay while responsible for Government property. The Medical Department will have one surgeon-general and one assistant surgeon-general, with respective ranks, etc., of brigadier-general and colonel of cavalry; seventy-five surgeons, with rank, etc., of major of cavalry; one hundred and fifty assistant-surgeons, with rank, etc., of first-lieutenants of cavalry, for the first three years, and afterward of captains; and five storekeepers. One surgeon may be detailed as chief medical purveyor, with rank, etc., of colonel of cavalry, to superintend the purchas ing and issue of medical supplies, and five assistants, with the rank, etc., of lieutenant-colonel.

Coming to the Pay Department, we find that it is to consist of a paymaster-general, ranking as brigadier, two assistants, ranking as colonels of cavalry, and two deputies, as lieutenant-colonels; and sixty paymasters, with rank, etc., of major of cavalry. The Engineer Corps is to have a chief, ranking as brigadier-general, six colonels, twelve lieutenant-colonels, twenty-six majors thirty captains and twenty-six first and ten second-lieutenants, with the same pay and emoluments as at present. The five engineer companies will constitute an Engineer Battalion. The Ordnance Dépôt will remain precisely as now organized. The Bureau of Military Justice will consist of the judge-advocate-general and one assistant, with respective rank, etc., of brigadier-general and colonel of cavalry. An ordnance sergeant and hospital steward will be appointed for each military post, a band enlisted for each regiment, and the present number of post chaplains will be retained.

Next to the size and the organization of the Army, the question of interest is as to the officering. What vacancies are there to be, and what chance for luck or merit? This is the urgent question. We regret, in behalf of some anxious friends, to record that the chief fortune looked for in this regard, was, in the Senate, destroyed at one fell swoop. That body decided one major to be enough for 10-company in fantry, regiments, and fifty fine places were swept off with a scratch of the quill. This amendment has been received with great disfavor by majors-expectant. For ourselves, we are forced to say that there is great strength in the argument derived from the usefulness of two majors in case a regiment is separated into several parts, serving in different localities. We hope the House will think over this subject of two majors. Next, as to the vacancies which the bill does create. While there are none in the artillery, there will be many, as we have seen, in the cavalry, infantry, pay, medical, and quartermaster's departments. In the six new cavalry regiments, the lieutenants and two-thirds of the officers above the grade of first lieutenant are to be selected from the officers and soldiers of the Volunteer cavalry, and one-third from the Regular Army—pro-vided they have served two years in the field during the war, and have been distinguished for capacity and good conduct. The same qualification is prescribed for the infantry vacancies, except, of course, that the candidates are to be from the "Volunteer infantry and "artillery," in place of the Volunteer cavalry. The wise addition of the Volunteer artillery to the candidates gives them a chance in the infantry, to make up for the lack of vacancies in their own arm. In all three arms the Volunteer officers selected are to be distributed among the States in proportion to the number of troops furnished during the war. This measure at least has the color of justice, though it may not be entirely for the good of the service at the start; and it certainly is admirably expedient, in order to quiet objection.

Analogous provisions apply to the other vacancies. In the Quartermaster's Department the chief or only vacancies created are of the grade of assistant quartermaster. These are to be filled by assistant quartermasters of Volunteers, who served two years meritoriously during the war. So, in the Pay Department, the vacancies are among the sixty paymasters. These are to be filled from the additional paymasters who served two years of the war. In the Medical Department the following rule is adopted:

ment the following rule is adopted:

Two-thirds of the vacancies hereby created in the grades of surgeon and assistant surgeon shall be filled by selection, upon competent examination, from among the persons who have served as staff and regimental surgeons or assistant surgeons during the war, and one-third from similar officers of the Regular Army; and persons who have served as assistant surgeons three years in the Volunteer service shall be eligible for promotion to the grade of captain; and the Secretary of War shall be and is hereby authorised to appoint from the enlisted men of the Army, and to cause to be enlisted, as many competent hospital stewards as the service may require, to be permanently attached to the Medical Department, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe.

majors, thirty captains and twenty-six first and ten The Engineer Battalion is to be officered by suitable details from the corps, the adjutant and quartermaster having the pay of similar cavalry officers. In all these appointments Regular officers who commanded Volunteer troops during the war may claim to be officers of Volunteers with the rank they then held.

The employment and officering of colored troops is one which naturally has excited much discussion. As the matter now stands, according to the Senate Bill, we are to have ten colored regiments-two of cavalry and eight of infantry. But the original idea of officering these regiments by officers who had already held command in Volunteer colored regiments was overthrown in the Senate, after a lively debate. This works in a double way. On the one hand it prevents the monopoly of about four hundred commissions by officers who had a particular line of experience; but, on the other, it will result in advancing officers for promotion without regard to the regiment being white or colored. So that a captain of white troops may be promoted to a majorship of colored troops. Mr. FES-SENDEN introduced the amendment, and it was mainly supported by himself and Mr. GRIMES, and as warmly opposed by Senators HARRIS and McDougall. Mr. GRIMES, for example, thought an officer had better be made to resign if he could not command colored troops when his promotion made it his duty. On the other hand, Mr. McDougall thought that he would insist on resigning in such contingency; and the latter actually offered an amendment to have no colored troops at all, which, of course, was voted down. How the House will debate this subject we shall soon see.

With regard to the Signal Corps, the Veteran Reserve Corps, the examinations for commissions, the military professorship, the superintendent of cemeteries, and other interesting points, we have already spoken at length. Reference to a portion of these points will also be found elsewhere in the JOURNAL, and particularly in the able suggestions under the head of Correspondence. It is still an open question whether Mr. Wilson's Bill will be adop ed, for Mr. SCHENCK'S Bill is once more talked of. But the former has the approval, in the main, of many high

AFTER the surrender of Lee last spring, Colonel O. E. BABCOCK, of General GRANT's staff, took his sword with him to the United States Arsenal in Washington for some slight repairs. He was absent frem the city during the Summer, and in October when he called on Colonel Ben-TON at the Arsenal for the sword it could not be found, though the Colonel had most diligent search made for The overseer of the work-shop think some one called for it in Colonel BARCOCK's name, and that it was delivered to said person. The sword is one the Colonel had worn during a good portion of the War, and was a present and highly prized. It is a straight staff sword, commonly known as a rapier blade. The guard is plainly engraved as follows: "O. E. BARCOCK, Corps of Engi-" neers, from his brother C. W. Babcock, February 1863." Any one knowing the whereabouts of this sword will do Colonel BARCOCK a great favor by sending him such information. His address is: Brevet Colonel O. E. BABCOCK, Heedquarters General Grant, Washington, D. C.

THE JOURNAL of December 23, 1865, contained an account of an "Eventful Life," which some readers may still recall with interest. The subject of that memoir, Captain I, on the 9th of March last filled out his round and full century, and is now vigorously beginning his one hundred and first year. His hundredth birthday was celebrated by an elegant breakfast at the New York residence of his friend, General DE PEYSTER, whose birthday, by a happy coincidence, fell upon the same day. The private character of the festivities will excuse any description of them in a public journal. But, having set forth at some length in the article already referred to, the extraordinary, and almost incredible, adventures of the venerable officer's career, we are happy to supplement the account by recording the prosperous conclusion of his first century. We know of no living centenarian whose history is so eventful, and whose experience has been so singular and varied.

THE Russian Bear has not always been so inclined to fraternize with the American Grizzly as now, when the ded Eagle is about to shake claws with the Baldheaded Eagle across Behrings Straights. In 1776, the Empress (CATHERINE) of Russia agreed to furnish his Majesty (George III., King of England), with 20,000 of her best troops, to be employed in the next campaign in America against our newly declared liberty and rights. This fact is very little known. Political unions have no bases or ties but interest, and Russia interest is now against, not toward, amity with Great Britain.

Under instructions from Headquarters of the Army, the following forts, defences north of the Potomac, will be at once dismantled: Carroll, Stanton, Baker, Mahan, Lincoln, Totten, Slocum, Stevens, Reno and Sumner. All ordnance and ordnance stores will, under the supervision of Brigadier-General R. A. HASKIN, commanding defences of Washington, be turned in at the Washington arsenal; such measures in the transfer of loaded projectiles being taken to prevent accidental explosions. This reduces the famed "defences of Washington" to a peace footing, and leaves of them only the powerful water battery on the Maryland shore, above Fort Foote, which, armed with the heaviest and most approved artillery, commands the Potomac river for miles below and above; the formidable work on the Virginia shore, near Alexandria, known as Battery Rodgers, mounted with heavy guns of long range, also ential to guard the river approach to the metropolis; and Fort Whipple, in Virginia, about midway between Alexandria and Washington, used as a military prison, and to which the Old Capitol prisoners were removed. The two former will, no doubt, be permanently retained and strengthened. One or two works in Virginia are temporarily retained for storage of ordnance 4th, The question of calibre will be determined by the Board after the consideration of the experiments by this and foreign Governments on the subject. The Board will, however, verify by actual trial the conclusions arrived at.

5th, Each person will state, in writing, the lowest price at which his arm will be furnished by himself, or the rate per thousand at which he will allow the Government to make them. These proposals will be made separately, on

THE St. Paul Pioneer says:

It is understood that General Corse's mission to Fort Abercrombie, whither he is now on his way, is for the special purpose of recovering from, hostility by treaties, those remaining bands of Indians now occupying the country along the northern highway to Montana. The General is using every exertion in his power to reach these Indians, and bring them into their former peaceful relations with the Government. Hearing lately that a large band or two had sent in word that they would like to see the General, and, if possible, make some terms by which they might leave the war path, General Corse immediately sent out Colonel Adams with a force from Abercrombie to communicate with the Indians, and the General himself has now gone up there to await his report and effect some amicable adjustment of the existing difficulties. We learn that the portion of Company A, Second cavalry, who were out in the recent terrible storm on the Coteau, and who retreated, narrowly escaping death, to Fort Wadsworth, have It is understood that General Corse's mission to Fort treated, narrowly escaping death, to Fort Wadsworth, have reached Sauk Centre in good health and spirits. THE official Register of the Volunteer force of the United States, upon which so much time and skill have been expended, is now in the hands of the Public Printer, and will soon be ready for distribution. It will be furnished to those who may desire it, by John O. Deferes Esq, the Public Printer, who is authorized to charge for it one dollar. The Register has been compiled in the Adjutant-General's office with extraordinary patience, minuteness and accuracy. It comprises the history of every Volunteer regiment, battalion and company which were in the United States service during the war, and gives a mass of information in regard to the Volunteer Army, which will make it of great value as a book of reference as well as a tribute to the services of that vast force which the war called into existence.

An extensive sale of army wagons, ambulances and carts, has been going on at Lincoln Branch, Quartermaster's office, depot of Washington (formerly Lincoln Hospital), under the direction of Major Heistand, A. Q. M. All the carts of the lot now on sale have been disposed of; but few ambulances and about sixty army wagons remain to be sold. Ambulances brought from $40 to $60, and wagons averaged about $17 each. Major Heistand will continue the sale so long as the wagons bring fair prices.

THE Secretary of War has ordered that the sale of the public buildings at Giesboro, D. C., be suspended until further orders. General Ekin, who is in control of the property, has accordingly withdrawn his advertisements for the sale of the public buildings at that depot. Sales of miscellaneous stores, not required for public service, will, however, be made from time to time. A large sale A large sale of medicines, veterinary tools, etc., will take place at the depot on Thursday, the 29th instant.

LIEUTENANT-GENERAL GRANT has ordered commanding officers of posts and depots, as soon as possible after the arrival of deserters at their posts, to forward charges to the Commanding General of the department in which their posts or depots may be situated, who will, with as little delay as practicable, take measures to have the deserters brought to trial.

FORT Garland, Colorado Territory, has been transferred the district of New Mexico. Brevet Major-General to the district of New Mexico. James H. Carleton, commanding the District of New Mexico, is ordered to send one company to relieve the present garrison at Fort Garland, which, on being relieved will report to Brevet Major-General E. Upron, at Denver City.

THREE full companies of the Seventeenth Infantry passed through New York on the 20th, en route for Detroit, Michigan. The detachment was commanded by Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel D. L. Montgomery, and the companies by Captain Wilson, Lieutenants Steelhonmer and BLACK.

THE field, staff, and non-commissioned staff of the Ninth Iowa cavalry, the Fifty-ninth, One Hundred and First, and battery A, Second regiment United States colored troops, and all the Volunteer troops in the Department of Missouri are to be mustered out.

THE total number of employés under General RUCKER at one time during the war amounted to nearly twenty thousand; it is now less than one thousand three hundred. The highest number of horses foraged in the department was seventy-five thousand; it is now less than five thousand.

THE following colored troops have been ordered to be mustered out of the service: Twenty-first, Thirty-fifth and One Hundred and Thirteenth regiments of infantry, and the Sixth regiment of cavalry.

THE Forty-eighth Wisconsin infantry, First Iowa cavalry, and several regiments of United States colored troops have been mustered out.

Benton Barracks, Missouri, has been discontinued as a rendezvous for the discharge of returning troops.

MILITARY AND NAVAL AFFAIRS IN CONGRESS.

THE bill making appropriations for the Naval service for the year ending June 30, 1867, has passed the Senate, with amendments providing $25,000 for the purchase of the Governor's residence, at Annapolis, Md.; $100,000 for the erection of buildings for the third and fourth classes of the Naval Academy; $20,000 for the erection of a foundery and machine-shop at the Naval Academy; $7,000 for the repair of the chapel at the Academy, and the placing of mural tablets therein, commemorative of such Naval officers as have fallen in the defence of their country; and directing that hereafter no vacancies in the grade of professor of mathematics in the Navy shall be filled; also amendments abolishing the office of assistant in the Bureau of Ordnance; appropriating $1,000 for mileage of Board of Visitors to Naval Academy; repealing all acts authorizing the appointment of Navy Agents; appropriating $100,000 for continuing the work on the boiler-shop in the Brooklyn Navy-yard. The Senate has also passed a bill authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to lease or sell at auction all marine hospitals, where the relief furnished to sick marines shall not equal twenty cases per diem on an average for the four years last preceding, excepting where no other suitable accommodations for the patients can be procured upon reasonable terms. The same bill authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to sell at auction such revenue cutters as are ill-adapted to the service, and to expend the proceeds in the purchase and construction of more vessels. The following resolution was adopted by the

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy furnish, through a report of the Naval Observatory, the summit levels and distances by surveys of the various proposed lines for inter-oceanic canals and railroads between the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, as also their relative merits as practical lines for the construction of a ship canal, and especially as relates to the Honduras, Tehauntepec, Nicaraugus, Panama and Atract lines; and also whether, in the opinion of the superintendent, the Isthmus of Darien has been satisfactorily explored, and if so, furnish in the detail charts, plans, lines of levels, and all information connected therewith, and upon what authorities they are based.

Mr. Fessenden, from the Committee on Finance, re ported the bill making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy, with amendments, striking out the proviso prohibiting the payment of money in violation of the oath of office prescribed by the act of 1862, and to cadets appointed since January last from States lately in rehellion. The appropriation for the library is increased to $2,000, and for repairs of officers' quarters is increase to $10,000. An additional appropriation of $6,000 is made for reflooring the buildings; $3,000 for quarters for sub-altern officers, and $2,000 for fuel for warming the messhall, and shoemakers' and tailors' shops.

Mr. Wilson introduced a bill to provide for the equalization of the bounties to soldiers in the late war of the Rebellion. It enacts as follows:

ization of the bounties to soldiers in the late war of the Rebellion. It enacts as follows:

Section I. That to each and every soldier who served in the armies of the United States in the late war of the Rebellion, and who has been or may hereafter be honorably discharged therefrom, there shall be paid, except as hereinafter specified, a bounty of eight and one-third dollars per month for each and every month of service rendered. Sec. 2. That in calculating the amount of bounty due and to be paid to each soldier under the provisions of this act, deductions shall be made for any and all payments of bounty made or agreed to be made by the United States, so that in no case will any soldier receive a greater sum in bounty than eight and one-third dollars for each or any month of service, and no bounty whatever shall be paid to any soldier who has deserted from the service, nor to any soldier who was a prisoner of war at the time of enlistment, nor to any soldier who has been discharged at his own request, unless for the purpose of accepting promotion or appointment in the Army or Navy, or who has been discharged at the request of parents, guardians, or other persons, or on the ground of minority.

Sec. 3. That any soldier who has bartered, sold, assigned, transferred, loaned, exchanged or given away his final discharge papers, or any interest in any bounty provided by this or any other act of Congress, shall not be entitled to receive any bounty whatever under this act, and before payment is made to any soldier he shall be required to make oath or affirmation that neither his discharge papers nor any interest as aforesaid in any bounty has been so bartered, sold, assigned, transferred, exchanged, loaned or given away.

Sec. 4. That in the payment of the bounty herein provided for, it shall be the duty of the Paymaster-General, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, to examine the accounts of each and overly soldier now living, to whom the said bounty is payable, and upon asce by law.

SEC. 5. That the proceeds of the tax now laid, and of any tax which may hereafter be laid on cotton, shall be set apart as a fund for the payment of the bounties herein provided for, and for the extinguishment of any debt incurred in payment of said bounties.

A bill to provide for an annual inspection into Indian Affairs has also passed the Senate. The bill establishes five inspection districts with five Boards of Inspectors of Indian Affairs, each consisting of three members; one chief inspector, to be appointed by the PRESIDENT, by and with the ent of the Senate, who shall hold his office dvice and cons for the term of four years; one inspector, to be an officer of the Regular Army, who shall be annually selected by for the term of four years; one inspector, to be an officer of the Regular Army, who shall be annually selected by the Secretary of War for that purpose, and one to be annually appointed by the PRESIDERT, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from among such persons as may be the recommended by annual meetings or conventions of the religious societies or denomination United States as suitable persons to act upon said Boards: or in case of their failure to make such recommendations, from such persons as he shall deem proper. Each of said inspectors appointed by the PRESIDENT shall receive a salary of four thousand dollars per annum in full of all ex-, and the officer detailed to act as inspector shall penses, and the officer detailed to act as inspected susserve without additional pay or allowances as such, except mileage provided by law, as in military service. It is made the duty of said Boards of Inspection to visit all the Indian tribes within their respective districts at least once in each year, to examine into their condition and into the condition of their fermion of wheeler to hear their complaints, to tion of their farms and schools; to hear their complaints; to ascertain whether all the stipulations of treaties are kept, and whether all moneys, goods, and supplies are faithfully and justly applied, purchased, and distributed; to examine and justly applied, purchased, and distributed; to examine into the books, accounts, and manner of doing business of the superintendents and the agents within their respective districts; to make diligent inquiry into the conduct of the officers and employés of the Indian Department, and into the conduct of the military forces toward the Indians, with power to summon witnesses and the aid of the military, who are hereby directed to aid them to compel their attendance. dance—each member of said Board being authorized to administer the oath; and said Board shall be authorized to suspend for cause any officer or employé of the Indian Department in their respective districts, subject to the approval of the PRESIDENT.

Mr. Wilson, from the Military Committee, reported the bill to establish a home for totally-disabled soldiers and sailors of the United States, with a recommendation that certain House amendments be concurred in. The amendments strike out the provisions with regard to seamen, and makes it applicable only to soldiers. The House amend-ments were concurred in, and the bill now goes to the PRESIDENT for his signature.

Mr. Sumner called up a joint resolution authorizing Commodore WILLIAM RADFORD to accept a decoration from "assent of Congress be and the same is hereby given to "Commodore WILLIAM RADFORD, of the Navy of the United States, to accept a decoration from the King of Italy, as a "reward for the assistance rendered by him to the Italian "frigate Red' Italia when she got ashore near Long Branch." In the House the same day the subject was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The House of Representatives have been too much occupied with the "Loan bill" as it is called, the past week to give any attention to other matters of legislation. Mr. Schenck, from the Military Committee, reported a substi-tute for his bill, reorganizing the Army. It differs so much from the bill just passed the Senate, and which we publish elsewhere, that it is evident that the Senate bill will receive important modification at the hands of the House. It is probable that a Committee of Conference will be required to reconcile the differences between the two branches of Congress. The following resolutions have passed of Congress. the House of Representatives instructing the Com the House of Representatives instances of con Military Affairs to inquire into the expediency of providing by law for the publication of a work which sh give full and accurate maps and landscape views of the various battle-fields of the war, with plates of the fortifications of the contending armies, etc.; directing the Committee on Pensions to inquire into the expediency and justice of providing by law for the cases of officers and soldiers or providing by law for the cases of officers and soldiers who have disappeared, and who are supposed to have been murdered by Rebels, etc.; instructing the Committee on Military Affairs to inquire into the expediency of providing by legislation that the tenth section of the act of March 3, 1865, for calling out the National forces, etc., shall not be construed to apply to the Committee of March 3. construed to apply to the Quartermaster General of the United States.

Mr. Smith, of Kentucky, introduced a joint resolution returning the thanks of Congress to Major-Generals Gon-don Granger, and James A. Garpield, for their gallant and heroic conduct in saving the Army of the Cumberland from destruction at the battle of Chickamauga. The resolution was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The Speaker laid before the House a message from the President of the United States, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the House, some statements of the Secretary of War in regard to the present condition and strength of the United States Army. The message was laid upon the table and ordered to be printed.

The Secretary of War states that of the troops in service on the 9th of January last, 10,890 were employed in Missouri; 4,641 in Virginia; 3,106 in North Carolina; 4,768 in South Carolina; 1,613 in Georgia; 10,193 in Mississip-pi; 10,623 in Alabama; 10,684 in Tennessee; 8,567 in Ar-kansas; 10,163 in Louisiana, and 29,248 in Texas. Orders departments; and as fast as recruits are made the un ganized companies are formed and put en route for the de partments where their regiments are serving. Recruits are also being sent to fill up companies already organized. About three thousand recruits per month are now being enlisted. The Seventeenth infantry is reorganizing at Hart's Island, New York, where it composes, temporarily, the garrison for a depot at which Volunteers are paid and discharged. The number of general, staff and retired offi-cers of the Regular Army is 569, and of general and staff ers in the Volunteer service 1,018. Twenty-one Major-Generals, and one hundred and one Brigadier-Generals or dered to be mustered out by general orders are not included The exhibit shows that three Regular officers and 599 Volunteer officers are receiving pay, but are unemployed. The latter consist chiefly of those ordered to their residence for muster-out. It further appears from the document that five Regular officers and 652 Volunteer officers are without commands. Of these, 621, belonging to the Veteran Reserve Corps, are retained under a resolution of Congress to await further action in their cases. The officers reported in this list, though without a command of soldiers presponding to their rank, are either employed on duties legitimate to their commissions, or suffering from severe wounds received in battle and not yet healed, with the exception of two, who are on leave. The recapitulation ows the troops in the Volunteer service to be, of whites 2,264 officers and 55,326 men; of colored troops, 2,393 of cers and 63,373 men. In the Regular service there are 1,124 officers and 25,463 men; general, staff, and retired e Regular Army, 621; general and staff officers of the Volunteer service, 1,018; first battalion of the Veteran Reserve Corps, not attached to companies, 609; ditto, ditto, twelve officers and 448 men; signal corps sixofficers and 58 men. Deducting the officers of the Regular Army in the Volunteer service, there are 7,943 of rs, forming, with the men, a grand total of the Army of the United States of 152,611 men. The estimate of the annual expense of the Army, as now organized and dis tributed, is $120,302,770. Deduct the estimate for troop ordered to be mustered out ($32,940,118) and the aggregate remaining is $87,362,750.

Mr. SMITH offered a resolution, which was adopted, instructing the Committee on Military Affairs to inquire into the propriety of making an appropriation to complete the work inaugurated by Major-General Thomas, commanding the Military Division of the Tennessee, and other officers commanding divisions and departments, of disinterring and gathering into National cometeries the soldiers who gave their lives for the salvation of the Union, with power to send for persons and papers.

Mr. Lawrence, of Ohio, offered a resolution, which was adopted, instructing the Committee on Military Affairs to inquire into the expediency of authorizing the Secretary of War to purchase for the use of the Army a certain number of copies of a work on infantry tactics, prepared by Colonel James Dugan.

Mr. JULIAN introduced a bill to equalize the bounties of soldiers and sailors who served in the United States during the late Rebellion, which was read twice and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

WE recently made the tour of the principal steamengine-building establishments which are engaged in the construction of the machinery for the new screw fleet.
This fleet, it may be well in this place to remark, consists of five sloops, of 3,213 tons each, to be propelled by machinery which has been designed, even to the most minute detail, by the Bureau of Steam Engineering of the Navy Department; and twenty vessels of about 3,177 tons each, the machinery also designed by the Steam Bureau. To this list should be added the Idaho, fitted with machinery designed by Mr. Dickerson, the Madawaska, machinery designed by Captain Ericsson, and the Chattanooga, machinery designed by Merrick & Sons of Philadelphia.

We found that, with the exception of the Wampanoag's machinery, building at the Novelty Works, New York, the work on the machinery from the plans of the Steam Bureau was progressing very slowly; in fact, in several instances, it was almost entirely suspended; while, on the other hand, that machinery which has been constructed from the plans of the builders themselves, or by civilian engineers employed by them, is now ready for steam, having passed through preliminary trials.

The explanation of this backwardness appears to be that

The explanation of this backwardness appears to be that the details of the machinery from the plans of the Steam Bureau are of such an unprecedented character, both as regards the free and extravagant use of brass and other expensive materials, as well as the complicated and unusual form of the various parts which make up the machine, that the contract price, in most cases, will by no means cover the cost of construction, leaving profit out of the question altogether.

Hence, it seems that the contractors are unwilling to push work in the completion of which they are sure to be muleted in quite a large sum. Again, as many of these contractors are marine engine builders of great experience, they do not take the necessary interest in constructing machinery, the most trivial details of which are planned by the mathematicians connected with the Bureau. Even if plans had been made by constructing-engineers of acknowledged experience, this want of interest would, to a certain extent, which we visited, the complicated details of the 100-inch cylinder-geared engines for the five large sloops of the Wampanoag class, and the 60-inch cylinder-direct action engines of the twenty sloops of the next class, it seems plain that, at the present rate of progress, some of these machines will not be ready for steam in two years, at

There is another point, which, although it does not appe to bear immediately on the time of the completion, should be mentioned in this connection. It seems that the opinion prevails in some quarters, that the 100-inch cylinder geared engines of the Wampanoag class, will be failures as sea-going engines. This, it is said, will be the case for the following reasons, which, indeed, appear to have some foundation. The engines are placed directly in the midned directly to the bottom of the vessels. They are not provided with bed plates. The crank shaft, which is rigid throughout, is supported by four bearings resting on the bottom of the ship—this shaft is upward of forty feet long, hence if the ship bends, this shaft will bind in the bearings to such an extent that the most copious applicaea water cannot keep the bearings cool. Three or these bearings also support the screw shaft, hence any bending or twisting of the vessel will not only make the bearings heat beyond the power of water to cool, but by ing with the absolutely necessary parallelism of the teeth of the cog wheels which connect the crank shaft with the screw shaft, will cause the destruction of the woo cogs, and, these wooden cogs destroyed, the vessel is helples

It is possible that the erroneousness of this piece of construction has been somewhat exaggerated, but it seems to be of sufficient importance to demand the immediate attention of the Secretary of the Navy.

In our opinion, a Board composed of engineers, in no way connected with contracts, should be at once appointed and ordered to investigate this matter, so that if possible proper measures may be taken to prevent such a serious catastrophe as the failure of five of our largest and most important vessels, or, on the other hand, if this alarm is groundless, the apprehension of failure may be removed by the investigation.

While the Mad.noaska and Chattanooga, vessels of the Wampanoag class, have been for some time ready for steam, Mr.
ISHERWOOD'S machinery, in many of the shops, is scarcely progressing at all. Nor can it be said that the eminent civilian engineers, who planned the Madanoasca and Chattanooga, have slighted their work; for it is admitted on all hands that they are both marvels of superior workmanship; moreover, it is stated that they have been heavy losers, but, having made their own plans, they have felt bound to complete their contracts.

FOREIGN MILITARY AND NAVAL AFFAIRS.

A St. Petersburger letter mentions that a banquet which had just taken place at Cronstadt, in celebration sixty-third anniversary of the Naval Club, had been the on of a fresh manifestation of sympathy between Russians and Americans. General CLAY, the United States Minister, and Mr. Cartin, Secretary of the American Legation, were invited to be present, and the former occupied the place of honor, having on his right Admiral NovossiL say, the Governor of Cronstadt, and on his left Rear-Admiral Lussovsky. After the usual toasts to the Emperor, the Imperial Russian Family, etc., that of General CLAY was drunk, and the American national anthem executed by an excellent choir. Admiral LESSOVSKY then traced a rallel between the history of the American and Russian fleets, and proposed a toast to their prosperity. The American Minister, in his reply, remarked that the friendly relations between the two countries have derived a fresh force from late events. The Polish Revolution and the ion in the United States have been, he said, for the two countries a trial from which each has issued victoriously. General CLAY was then elected by acclamation an rary member of the Naval Club.

At Midsummer last an educational and religious census was taken of a number approaching 30,000 of the petty officers, men and boys serving in the British Navy. It was found that of the petty officers 16 per cent. could only read indifferently, and more than 5 per cent could not read at all; 23 per cent. could write only indifferently, and 7 percent. could not write at all. Of the seamen, 26 per cent. read indifferently, and 11 per cent. could not read at all; 23 per cent. wrote indifferently, and nearly 14 per cent. could not write at all. Of marines, 26 per cent. read indifferently, and 23 per cent. evald not read at all; 32 per cent. wrote indifferently, and 27 per cent. could not write at all. Of boys, 30 per cent. read indifferently, and not quite 2 per cent. could not read at all; 37 per cent. wrote indifferently, and more than 2 per cent. could not write at all. Of course the per centages not thus accounted for read or wrote well. Taking all these classes together (excluding mere boys), 72 per cent. described themselves as belonging to the Church of England, 16 per cent. were Roman Catholics, 4 per cent. were Presbyterians, and 8 per cent. belonged to other Protestant denominations.

The London Army and Navy Gazette says that "it is "stated that Captain H. R. H. Prince Alfred has ex"pressed a desire to be appointed to the command of H. M.
"S. Galatea. The Galatea is a frigate mounting 26 guns, of "3,227 tons, 800 horse-power, with a crew of 700 men, a "very proud and responsible command for a young man
"only twenty-two years of age. The Prince will no doubt "be provided with a steady commander of mature age, "whose prospects of advancement will not, however, it is "to be hoped, be sacrificed merely to "dry-nurse" his "Royal captain."

THE moving of the Navy estimates in Parliament, by Lord CLARENCE PAGET, provoked a long discussion on the policy of the Admiralty. The turret system of iron-clads and the Admiralty's treatment of Captain Coles were the leading subjects of debate. Mr. FERRAND severely censured the Admiralty for displacing Mr. Lang and Mr. WATT to make room for Mr. REED, and showed how much the public service had suffered from this partiality and from the refusal to allow Captain Coles the opportunity of building a sea-going turret-ship. He particularly censured the Admiralty for displacing Captain Coles for writing a letter to the newspapers, though he had since apologized. Lord C. PAGET stated that Captain Coles had since been reinstated-a statement which loudly cheered. Sir M. Pero also criticised the conduct of the Admiralty toward Captain Coles and gave some particulars of the American iron-clads, contending that there was great room for future improvement in the British fleet. He concurred with Mr. SAMUDA in recommending a Committee of Inquiry into the best form of construction, and discussed the expediency of giving more scope to the ingenuity and enterprise of private builders. Mr. SAMUDA analyzed the constitution of the British iron fleet, contend ing that England had only ten ships which could be placed in the front line of battle, and censured the vacillation of the Admiralty in their alternate preference for fully armed and partially armed vessels. He recommended the addition of six turret-ships to the navy, of about three thousand tons each. Mr. Corry criticised minutely the defects of the iron ships recently built by the Admiralty, and quoted the opinions of Mr. LAIRD, Mr. O. LANG, and Mr. WATTS, that an efficient turret-ship could be built of 3,500 tons, with a poed of fourteen or fifteen knots. Lord PAYES stated that by the first of April England would have thirty armor-plated ships afloat, and that it was intended to nce a double-turreted ship to carry four 22-ton guns, of 5,099 tons, 1,100 horse-power, and a speed of fourteen knots. It was also intended to build two large ironplated vessels of the Amazon class, and a smaller vessel which, with the Hercules and another iron-plated vesel now building, would make fifteen thousand tons of shipping proposed to be constructed during the coming He mentioned also, that since July 1859, the Admiralty had got rid of three hundred and twenty useless Lord PAGET made an elaborate defence of the dockyard administration of the Admiralty, maintaining that the iron-clads of the navy were far superior to those built for foreign governments in private yards.

THE British Navy spent $7,761,625 for building iron ships during the year ending March 25, 1865—the total cost for building of all kinds being $10,222,550.

CAPTAIN FRANCIS DE WITT, Commissary of Subsistence U. S. Volunteers, who was recently tried by court-martial at Raleigh, North Carolina, on five separate charges in having knowingly and wrongfully sold subsistence stores of the United States," "applying to his own use and benefit money, the property of the United States," and for fraud, was found guilty on nearly all the charges and specifications, and sentenced by the Court "to pay a fine of five thousand dollars ($5,000) to the Government of the United States; and that he be imprisoned at Fort Macon, North Carolina, until such fine be paid; and that the crime, name, and place of abode of the accused, and this sentence, be published in the newspapers of the States of North Carolina and Massachusetts." The proceedings, findings and sentence of the Court were approve by the department commander, and the record forwarded for the action of the President, who has ordered as follows: The proceedings, findings and sentence, are disapproved, and Captain De Witt is hereby restored to his rank and position, free from any stain upon his character.

CAPTAIN. J. B. MALMSBURY, Sixth U. S. colored cavalry, has been eachiered the service.

THE EARLY DEAD.

The Exister of the Army and Navy Journal:

Sir:—The experience of men in their dealings with men and their memories verifies the truth of Solomon's remark, that "a living dog is better than a dead lion." Alas! how soon are the great and good forgotten. In their case is reversed the sense of the words in Sacred Revelation, that "their works do follow them:" they do indeed, since how seldom do they remain behind in the remembrance of those they have benefitted, to enrich the soil which bears their laurels, and render them more luxuriant with time. At the beginning of the Rebellion, there were four men who were chiefly instrumental in preserving and maintaining the affairs of the North. Three were among the first victims to the war; the fourth to the end, but equally a victim. To the first, Lyon, if it be not deemed irreverent, might be applied the words of Jacon, that he was "a "lion's whelp." The enemies of our country realized to their sorrow their disregard of the menace, "Who shall "rouse him up?" Lyon saved us at the West, just as Butles preserved affairs at the East. Whatever were Builer's faults at a later period, history cannot fail to highly sppreciate his influence and achievements during the early months of the war. NATOLEON, the great god of superficial military readers, declared in his letter of July 13, 1808, to SAVANY, in regard to Moncey's failure before Valencia, that a city of 80,000 to 100,000 inhabitants could not be taken by "a stroke on the "neck," or, as expressed in another place, "by the col-"lar," by an army of (Hanpen's Alison, iii. 65) 20,000 men. Butler, with from about 800 to 1,000 Militia, seized and held Baltimore with its 200,000 inhabitants, bloody with the murder of members of one of those regiments, arrogant in declaring that no more reinforcements should pass through its streets to treats secasion of the key-point, was revealed by th may provised captain whose judgment and audacity saved and "relieved the National Capital at the crisis of the initiatory "struggle."

Another illustrious martyr was Major-General C. F. Smith, whose fame belongs to the intermediate district between the Alleghanies and the Mississippi, whose Generalship and soldiership contributed in so great a degree to those successes, which, through the captures of Forts Henry and Donelson, and the first decisive great battle of the war, Shiloh, or Pittsburgh Landing, by shattering the Rebel power in the valleys of the Tennessee and Mississippi. While he exemplified the soldier's motto, "to fight "and to suffer," his fate, alas, belongs almost alone to the category of suffering, that abyss which swallows, too often in unnoticed graves, the vast majority of the victims of war. To him was denied the heroic end of Lyon, and although he died in the field, heperished by disease—fever—that military pestilence which has counted its victims by tens of thousands, where the sword and the bullet can boast but of their hundreds. Nevertheless, a gratified country should wreathe his tomb with garlands of "immortals," and nourish the laurel whose roots derive their sustenance from the ashes of a brave man and a great soldier.

The last to whom we shall allude in this brief necrology, is that "BAYARD" of the war and of America, who lost his arm at the San Antonio gate of Mexico, and left his body on the field of the night action of Chantilly. The valley of the Aztecs, the mountains of the Columbia, the Atlas "Gates of Iron," the plains of Lombardy, the swamps of the Chickahominy and the shores of the Potomac qually bear testimony to his surpassing merit as the dashing Dragoon, the daring Captain, the intrepid Volunteer, the reliable Aide-de-camp, the consummate General. Three continents—America, Europe and Africa—hail him equally as one who, against Southern daring, perfect discipline and wild ferocity, manifested the highest type of chivalric soldiership. How well he showed himself in his t when the retreat to Harrison's Landing was received by an indignant and eager Army, lost in amazement at such a resolve, the brave and chivalrous Kearny said, in the presence of many officers, "I, PHILIP KEARNY, an old "soldier, enter my solemn protest against this order for re-"treat; we ought, instead of retreating, to follow up the "enemy and take Richmond."

THE SENATE ARMY BILL

To the Editor of the Army and Navy Journal :

Sin:—Much interest is felt by Army officers in the action of Congress on the Army bills now under discussion. A large number of Army and Volunteer officers who have held high rank in the Army organization for the war, are rightfully expecting promotion and position. The bill which has just passed the Senate is, perhaps, as good a one for the Army and the country as could have been expected, the many questions involved in it; such as the retention of the Veteran Reserve Corps, the diversity of opinion as to the necessary size of "a standing Army," a just appreciation of the merits of both Regular and Volunteer officers, the number of colored troops to be permanently organized, the relative strength of each arm of the service, and the diversity of duties on which the Army is to be employed, seems to have been well considered, and the Senate bill, with the amendments, appears to have passed almost unani-seems to have been well considered, and the Senate bill, with the amendments, appears to have passed almost unanimously, and without any partizan discussion or party prejudice. It is hoped it may receive the same commendable treatment in the House.

There are some provisions of the bill that might be changed to advantage. The one in relation to examination of officers when promoted from one grade to another, has its objections. Instead of an examination on promotion, would it not be an improvement to leave that to the commanders of regiments or departments, who, at any time, on their personal observation or knowledge, or on the report of an Inspector of the incompetency or inefficiency of any officer, should be required to report such officer for examination by a board of officers, to be convened by order of the Secretary of War. It is quite likely that officers will serve for years without promotion—officers have served from ten to twenty years in the same grade. If an officer is incompetent, inefficient or of bad habits or character, should there not be a provision of some kind to get him out of the service, without waiting for his habits or character, should there not be a provision of some kind to get him out of the service, without waiting for his promotion. Is it not quite as detrimental to the service to retain in it a bad senior major as a bad junior lieutenant-colonel? The late order of the Lieutenant-General, issued as instructions to inspecting officers, if strictly complied with, with provision by law for a board of examination or investigation, would soon rid the service of unsuitable or unworthy officers, no matter in what grade they may be serving.

The Army and Navy Journal has never advocated the incorporating of the Veteran Reserve Corps into the permanent organization of the Army. It is quite as important that officers should undergo a physical examination as any other. It has, however, always insisted upon it, that liberal provision should be made for all officers and soldiers disabled in the service, no matter whether they belonged to the Veteran Reserves or any other Corps, or have been discharged the service for disability. This bill, reorganizing the Army, might, with propriety, make some provision for such meritorious officers, more liberal than the law now in force, without lessening the efficiency of the Army by making them a part of it.

The provision that any officer of Volunteers is eligible for appointment in the new organization, appears a nice one, otherwise his belonging to the Regulars, in a lower grade, would be a detriment to him, no matter how ably and efficiently he may have served as a Volunteer during the war. That fact should not certainly prevent or retard his promotion. The Army and Navy Journal has never advocated the on.

The reduction of the number of field officers, that is, pro-

The reduction of the number of field officers, that is, providing but one major to a regiment, is thought by many will not add to the efficiency of the Army. Certainly if a regiment is divided, and serving at a number of posts, it is quite likely that this will be the case. It is believed that posts or expeditions garrisoned by, or composed of more than one company, should be commanded by a field officer—placing an officer of low rank one day in command of a post, and the next returning him to the command of his company, neither adds to his comfort, his usefulness, or his influence over his subordinate officers or men.

The extended and multiplicity of duties likely to devolve upon the Army for all future time should, and appears to have had, its proper influence on Congress and our public officers. The change in the social and political relations of over four millions of our people; the extended frontier to be guarded; the unsettled condition of our Indian tribes, made more complicated by the bad influence of designing adventurers, who have in some instances seduced them from their allegiance to our Government, to say nothing of the proximity of a foreign force on our Southern frontier, who took advantage of our internal troubles to make an effort to establish a monarchical government as an ally to its own ambitious power, render it of the utmost importance that the new Army organization be officered by only those who in all and every emergency will sustain the Government of the great National Union in its entirety.

It is a happy omen that the present military bills before Congress are supported without party prejudice. All appear to appreciate the importance of a reliable Army as a peace establishment, the only differences (which are trifling) are in the mode of organizing it. The example set by a small portion of the Army at the commencement of the late Robellion, has had its good influence. It has convinced the authorities of the necessity of appointing none to trust or command who are likely to prove trai

Under the provisions of General Orders No. 79, March 1, 1865, from the War Department, the services of the following named paymasters being no longer needed, they have been ordered to be mustered out: William M. WHAT WE SHOULD SEND TO THE WORLD'S FAIR

EXTRACT FROM A SPRECH IN CONGRESS BY HON, N. P. BANKS.

MR. BANKS spoke of the unwillingness manifested by the Navy Department in regard to furnishing public vessels to transport goods to Paris, and said that the resolution had been amended so as to request the President, not the Secretary of the Navy, to do so. Nor was it required that the public vessels should bring back the products of our exhibitors, as that might involve the expense of waiting there for six months, or making another trip to France for them.

He spoke of our successes in former exhibitions of the yorld's industry, alluding to some of the most important, and then said:

World's industry, alluding to some of the most important, and then said:

There was one other point to be noticed; we had passed through a war of great trials and great sacrifices. The attention of the world had been called to it. There was nothing the people of the world would so desire as to see and to comprehend as the material and organization of the American Army. The Quartermaster-General proposed to send to the Exposition a baggage-wagon, manufactured in Philadelphia, which followed McClellan in his Potomac campaigns, Rosechans in his Tennessee campaigns, Sherman in his march from the mountains to the sea, and then in his campaign to Richmond, where it was present at the surrender of Lee. A wagon of that kind, with a history like that, would be the centre of observation and attention. A pair of worn-out shoes, the dress of an American soldier; the shelter-tent under which he slept; his bayonet, his musket, his knapsack, his cap; whatever he has, will attract more attention, draw greater crowds of people, and hold them longer and faster in study and observation than the crown jewels of England and France, and all the European States combined.

them longer and faster in study and observation than the crown jewels of England and France, and all the European States combined.

Mr. Banks continued: I want to see also the Navy of our country represented—that Navy which ought at least to be willing to assist us. I want the people of Europe to see of what our Navy is composed. I want them to see our iron-clads, our Monitors—as novel in navel architecture as the yacht America was. I want them to see the twenty-inch guns that we are fabricating, and the thousand-pound shot prepared for them. Our naval authorities, I am told, will summon the navies of the whole world to discharge their batteries on the uninteresting and silent Monitor that lies sleeping in their centre, if they will only allow that Monitor in return to throw a single shot at each of them when they have fired to their heart's content. I want the people of the world to see what our machinists have done and may do; and I want, too, to impress upon the people of Europe and of Asia the conviction that if there is a chance for them to make friends with the Americans, it is better that they do that than to make enemies of them. I want to show them that we prefer peace; that the fruits of industry and peace are our part; but that if war be demanded by their rulers, they must not count on unresisting war, but on one that will carry havoc and desolation into their country, as it has been carried into the countries of our enemies. And I want, too, that that simple, that most pure, that most spotless here of this age, or any age, Admiral Farragut, shall accompany our iron-clads, and our Monitors, and give to the people of Europe an evidence of the simplicity of a man whose naval exploits have surpassed in brilliancy and glory those of a Dugaley Tronin, who immortalized the Navy of France, of a Von Tronin, who immortalized the Navy of France, of a Von Tronin, and Sherman, and sherman the interest of peace

PRESENTATION TO GENERAL SHERMAN.

A house worth twenty-five thousand dollars has been presented to General Sherman in St. Louis. It is situated on Garrison avenue, near Franklin, and the lot is eighty-four feet front by a depth of one hundred and fifty feet. The money was raised in August last—the sum collected by his friends being thirty thousand dollars. The investment in the house was made recently, and the balance of the money deposited to the credit of the General, in the First National Bank of St. Louis. The correspondence has not been published until a few days since. Here is General Sherman's letter:

Headquarters Military Div. of the Mississippi, St. Louis, Mo., Aug. 15, 1865.

Gentlemen:—I am this moment in receipt of your kind note, in which you inform me that you have placed the sum of $30,000 to my credit, with which to enable me to procure a home in your midst. I can hardly find words adequate to convey to you my sense of obligation, both for the subject matter, and the manner in which it is done. This sum of money exceeds all that I have received from the Government of the United States for four years of labor, in the midst of danger and trouble, and I can hardly suppose I merit so valuable a reward from personal friends. But I confess it comes to me in such a shape as to encourage a belief that it will provide me what I most need—a home for my family—and will, therefore, increase my usefulness in the future. I therefore accept it with grateful thanks, and shall proceed to invest the amount in the purchase of a good house and lot, and will furnish it to the extent of every cent, when I will report to you the exact result. The property thus acquired shall be the "home" of myself and family as long as I possibly can command my time, which I hope will be for life.

Again thanking you most kindly, and through you the friends who have made up this sum, I am, with great respect, your friend and servant,

WM. T. Sherman,

Major-General United States Army.

WHERE KEARNY FELL

Brigadier-General——•:

Dear General:—In accordance with your request, I will mention such circumstances as occurred under my own observation just previous to the death of the brave and gallant General Philip Kearny, upon the field of battle, knowing that any incident, however trivial in itself, which tends to throw an additional ray of light upon the events of the last hour of one whose memory all delight to honor will be appreciated, and by none more than by yourself.

of the last hour of one whose memory all delight to honor will be appreciated, and by none more than by yourself.

The Rebel General Jackson's troops were moving on the 1st of September, two days after the battle of Groveton, down the Little River Turnpike, with a flank well extended and protected, while the Union Army was moving upon, and holding the road leading from Centerville, and intersecting the Little River Turnpike, about one and one half miles west of Fairfax Court-House.

General Reno's corps was moving down between these two roads, and, becoming engaged with the enemy, formed in line of battle facing the North.

It soon became very stormy and dark, but still the battle raged, and, as it progressed, General Reno's forces moved further to the right, vacating the ground previously held by his left.

On riding from this point, I found General Kearny, with his command, about to advance from the rear toward this vacated position, and informed him that it was vacated, and that his own left and front were uncovered by the movement of General Reno's troops. He expressed surprise, and said that, from the instructions he had received, he thought there was a force there which he was to support, if necessary. After replying to his particular inquiries as to who I was and my means of information, he added that my information, conflicted both with his instructions and other information received; but, if true, was very important for him to know. I then left him. I learned subsequently that he went forward immediately, and came soon upon the enemy, and was shot by it.

We all know of his personal bravery and courage, and are not surprised at the idea of his braving the danger of a personal reconnoissance to ascertain the relative position of the enemy to our own troops, when that point was in doubt, and the knowledge of vital importance.

I will not go on to speak of that which did not come under my own observation, but leave you, who have gleaned so many facts from other sources, to place these where they belong, a

A REGISTRY FOR ARMY AND NAVY OFFICERS.

At the request of many officers, a Register has been opened at the office of the Aumy and Navy Journat, No. 39 Park Row, New York, wherein officers of the Army and Navy are invited to enter their names, upon their arrival in the city of New York. The great convenience of such a Register, in the lack of any other common place of resort, will be manifest to every one. The Register will be open from ten o'clock in the morning until five o'clock in the afternoon. Officers at present in New York are requested to register their names.

THE FRENCH IN MEXICO.

DUBIOUS and sombre as the Mexican sky still looks, yet, upon the whole, the storm appears to be breaking. The only doubt is that-as we say of the weather-it may "clear up the wrong way;" lest the wind, going to the right point through the wrong quarter of the compass, may have all its veering to do over again. That the prediction of a French evacuation of Mexico is on the verge of fulfilment still seems, on the whole, indisputable. The only query is, whether our Government has bought the romise by any concession of its own-whether nonintervention in Mexican affairs has been promised. It ems to be taken for granted in Paris that NAPOLEON is sincere in his official declarations concerning the withdrawal of troops. It is true that the Memorial Diplomatique appears to allege that the mission of Baron SAILLARD to Mexico is not to carry to Marshal BAZAINE positive orders for the immediate evacuation, even partially, of that country, but rather to consult with that officer and MAXIMILIAN concerning their departure. Nevertheless, the language of M. ROUHER, the Minister of State, to the Legislative Body, though cautious and reticent, certainly implies positive and speedy evacuation. While he wished that body to affirm, without argument or inquiry, the portion of the address relative to Mexico, which was done, it is clear that this could not have been accomed without assurances of the honesty of the Emperor's intentions. The plea of M. ROUHER for a pause in the Mexican debate was the progress of ne-gotiations and the fact that MAXIMILIAN had not even received the French dispatches, much less replied to them. And he specially declared that this " mon idea of the return of our troops" was also the "idea of public opinion."

There is one thing which seems to refute the notion of the speedy evacuation of Mexico. It is the announcement in the leading military journal of Paris that the "sixth battalion of the foreign regimen "leaves for Mexico"—a fact, doubtless, since accom plished. A score of good reasons, however, might be assigned for this movement, which, after all, no more indicates a change of policy than the blaze of camp fires or the spirited assault or cannonade which often covers retreat. The evacuation of Mexico cannot be arranged like the turn of a kaleidoscope. The scene must shift slowly. Meanwhile, these new troops may be better fitted (for they are African Zouaves) for the Mexican climate than French native troops, and may replace treble their number of the latter. On the other hand, there are so many and so potent reasons for the evacuation of Mexico that we believe NAPO-LEON could not resist them, even were our Government less disposed than now to urge that course. The opposition to NAPOLEON'S scheme comes from three sources. First, from his own people. And why? Because the plan appears to them sterile, costly and dangerous. The French people, seeing America, most faithful friend of France, provoked to hostility by NAPOLEON'S ambition, become restless and ominous of evil. Knowing that the Mexican expedition has already cost France twelve thousand soldiers killed, wounded, and unfitted for service, and more than one hundred and thirty millions of dollars, they are still more discontented. Nor is there any thing to balance the account. A territory, on a distant continent, whose revenues can with difficulty in many years be so directed as to pay the costs of the expedition, much more the private debts to secure which the enterprise was ostensibly launched—this is the offset. The Mexican national receipts were already thoroughly farmed out under individual contracts, whereof the greater part had to be observed for the mere purpose of securing a foothold for MAXI-MILIAN and support from the influential. The rich possessions of the church had already been seized and scrambled," so to speak, among whoever would pay hard money to the always ready Government. Moreover, many of the people refused to be pacified, and daily involve France in new expense to subdue them. Accordingly, we find the opposition to the Mexican expedition growing more powerful with the lapse of time. Headed by such men as the eloquent and daring Jules FAVRE in the Corps Legislatif, its utternces are full of menace and pregnant with danger to Napoleonic rule. The French people back up the will of the opposition on this subject. If the Emperor continue his dangerous policy, this opposition will swell, strengthen, take definite shape, mould itself to events, become a fixed power. Around the Mexican question will aggregate other grievances and popular dissatisfactions, till NAPOLEON rues his obsti-Far better than any of us can tell him, that skilful leader of France and the world sees this impending storm; and already he shortens sail and will weather it.

We have always held that France herself was our best ally on this question, and that NAPOLEON'S ear would detect in his own realm an ominous rumble, far more prolific of peril, to his mind, than the most boisterous echo we could raise on this side of the At-For this reason, we have always found that diplomacy the wisest which allowed this domestic leaven to quietly work. Had we thrown a column of 50,000 men across the Rio Grande under SHERIDAN or LOGAN, what would have been the result? Marshal BAZAINE, eager to approve himself worthy of the baton he won so easily at Puebla, would have sullenly retired step by step, till, protected somewhat by the mountain country, he could have fought us inch by inch. Meanwhile, NAPOLEON would have thrown himself upon the generosity, the fidelity, the patriotism, and the national honor of France. Such an appeal in that country is never in vain. The threatening opposition would have disappeared, France have become a unit, and legion after legion would have been flung into Mexico, with a cry of "To the Granted that our young and tough nation could have endured another war with a fresh and more powerful antagonist, before getting breath from the last. Still, it would have been a tedious and exhausting affair, and would have accomplished-what? Noth ing more than, unless all signs fail, will be effected ow without a drop of blood or a penny of debt.

Nevertheless, though NAPOLEON III. might possi bly have dared to snap his fingers at our broken and exhausted country, had his own people been united for Mexican conquest, yet, when they are divided, our opposition becomes dangerous in the extreme. It is the second cause which forces the abandonment of the Latinizing of Mexico. It is the other beetle which alternates with the will of his own people in driving home the wedge now threatening to make a wide fissure in Napoleonic empire. It is a little curious how eager our people-who, despite the common theory to the contrary, are really extremely careless about the official management of most national affairs, still more of affairs international-are in this Mexican matter. Detract as much as we ought (and that is a great deal) for such carefully cooked ebullitions of public feeling as are due entirely to speculators in Mexican loans and other financial and political schemes, yet there remains a large residuum of genuine enthusiasm in favor of the so-called Mexican re public and against French intervention. One would fancy the Monroe Doctrine to be held as firmly by our people as the dogma of transubstantiation by the faithful, to hear the excited popular commentary on that subject. This unwonted depth of feeling is especially manifest in Congress. This body, as coming more freshly from the people, and lying, so to speak, closer to the popular heart, is full of indignation on the Mexican question, while such fervor as the Administration manages to get up on the subject is obviously mock, and Government is very justly suspected of leaning quite as far as practicable in the opposite direction. We are inclined to think, however, that Congress, on this as on all subjects, does intervening hitherto, while French troops were in honestly represent a majority of its constituents. Its Mexican resolutions smell of gunpowder, and its Mexican speeches bristle with bayonets.

To complete the embarrassment of his project, the Emperor finds Mexico herself ranged as a third with the other two hostile powers. By Mexico we do not mean wholly or chiefly the armed opposition of JUA-REZ, ORTEGA, ESCOBEDO, CANALES, CORTINA, and the other republican leaders and their scanty troops. deed, when a country which numbers its able-bodied male population in millions is subdued by two-score thousand foreigners, who have traversed for that purpose 3,000 miles of ocean, we need say little of the capabilities of its defenders. But there are other stumbling-blocks in the imperial path besides these republican forces which are scouting along the Texan border, ready to jump the line if forced too far. Among these difficulties are the hostile and unpromising character of the field NAPOLEON has begun to cultivate-a point to which we have already alluded, and which might be elaborated through a volume. That potentate is doubtless sufficiently disgusted with the possibilities of Mexico, considering his early visions of success and the actual disadvantages and opposition he found around him. But besides, the new empire in Mexico is very much disinclined to be a mere colony of France. MAXIMILIAN considers himself no longer Austrian but Mexican, and professes to rule by the will of the people. With no little probability it is rumored that he met Baron SAILLARD far more than half way, and sent the message to Paris that he was willing instantly to commence embarking the The ground of such action legions of BAZAINE. must be the resolute belief that he is supported by a majority of the Mexican people. Indeed, his treatment of the fugitive republican troops as guerillas is based on the same idea. But, the freer he feels of foreign support, the more he will throw off the obligations which that support creates. And, at this moment, little as we here reflect on the subject, there is a very strong MAXIMILIAN party among the Mexicans, which is equally strong against the French. In the City of Mexico this hostile feeling between the soldiery and the imperialists is often seen; yet it is the cause of the latter, his own subjects, which MAXIMILIAN always espouses. This fact gives color to the supposition that MAXIMILIAN and his partisans are quite willing to have the French retreat from his dominions. And it also shows how unsatisfactory Napoleon's relations must be with the Mexicans themselves.

It appears evident, therefore, that, whatever may be the casual contrary indications, the Emperor must be resolved to evacuate Mexico. That is one grand point in the solution of the problem. But this is not all. The reasons already given as being sufficient to influence Napoleon's conduct, do not include any promise or concession on our part. In other words, NAPOLEON must have made up his mind to go out of Mexico, independently of any such pledge or compro-Is it true, as alleged, that any promise of recognition of MAXIMILIAN was made by our Government? Certainly not. And the reason is, first, that no such promise would comport with our dignity as a nation; and, secondly, as already proved at length, that France would be compelled to leave Mexico at any rate, even without a single other diplomatic letter passing between Washington and the Tuileries. Mr. SEWARD is capable, apparently, of giving up everything to an enemy just at the moment that enemy is ready to give up everything to us. But such a move as now imputed to him would be the height of folly. France is determined to let Mexico alone, at any rate. She naturally seeks to make the best of a bad bargain. But why should we yield to her wishes? It is not we that have made the false step.

Nevertheless, the tone of Parisian gossip is so strong and uniform to the point that Mr. SEWARD has sent "satisfactory assurances" to the French Government, that we are bound to conjecture what they may be. His dispatch in answer to the letter of M. DROUYN DE LHUYS to the Marquis DE MONTHOLON which declared that France only waited for a guarantee of nonintervention in Mexico on our part before withdrawing her troops, has arrived. The reply is "highly satisfac-"tory." We believe, however, it will amount to this. In the first place, it can well assure non-intervention during the progress of the withdrawal of the troops. Because, whatever reason exists for not 366.

Mexico, must hold equally good until their departure is consummated, provided that movement is reasonably hastened. Nor is there any loss of dignity in such an ssurance, since the same policy has been maintained hitherto. But, as to pledging ourselves to non-intervention after France has retired from Mexico, we do not believe the PRESIDENT will venture on such a policy. It is entirely unnecessary; it would be destructive to national self-respect; it would not be sanctioned by Congress; it would be rejected by the people. Mr. SEWARD could very well state that, in his opinion, the neutrality which we have preserved toward Mexico for eighteen years would still be maintained. But he need not and could not pledge our policy for years to come. Indeed, Congress alone could exercise such prerogative in any event. Congress alone can give assurances of non-intervention, whether present or future, and just now it is hardly in the mood for doing so.

MR. BANCROFT'S FOREIGN CRITICS.

According to the European news, Mr. Bancroft's so-called funeral oration upon President Lincoln has attracted quite as much attention on the other side of the Atlantic as on this-except that there none names it but to dis-praise. The articles appearing on this subject in foreign papers are really amusing in style, however just may be their indignation. Washington correspondent of the London Times was first to open the ball. He said that Mr. STANTON had declined to act as the orator of the occasion for several reasons, "all of them based upon ideas of safety and "prudence;" that Mr. BEECHER would have been invited, "but, once set him going and it was impossi-"ble to say where he would stop;" that the whole performance was a deliberate insult of foreign powers and "an outrage which has seldom been equalled even "in this country;" that in Mr. BANCROFT'S elaborate attack, "the torrent of his bitterness and spleen was "concentrated upon England;" that Mr. BANCROFT "screamed out the venomous passages in a high and "broken voice, and with wild gestures and distorted "countenance;" that the whole ceremonial was "countenance;" that the whole ceremonial was "undignified and discreditable," and was "below the "level of an intemperate town meeting;" that Mr. BANCROFT was an "old man, delivering a dreary "réchauffé of his ponderous history in a quavering "voice, and making an attack at once coarse, brutal, and indecorous;" and, finally, that "the Americans "hate England, and love to hear her abused."

Now, to a reader of this newspaper criticism, it would seem that the correspondent was out-Heroding HEROD, and endeavoring to do precisely that which he condemns Mr. BANCROFT for trying. Editorially, the Times backs up its correspondent in the same tone. It says "the staple of the harangue was abuse of "England and its institutions;" that the speaker dragged in points so as to "rail at and vilify the "country whose language he was speaking;" that his oration was "indecency" and "coarse invective," and its author a "mischievous old man," who is "slandering" England and France, and whose bitterest passages, nevertheless, were "the most warmly greeted" by the polite assemblage." The Times adds that it is to such declamations that Fenianism is due. But, passing the various other comments, the announcement of the Opinion Nationale is, perhaps, one of the most amusing to quote. It declares:

The celebrated American historian, Bancroff, has imprudently wounded the dignity of the house of Hapsburg to the quick. He Has dared to qualify the Emperor Maximilian as an adventurer; and Francis Joseph has sent a strong protest on the subject to the Cabinet at Washington, which, however, has declined to entertain it, and consequently the great American Republic and the illustrious house of Austria are at loggerheads.

Now, we have been among those who very strongly disapproved the propriety of the speech of Mr. Ban-CROFT. It is not that his argument, both on the subject of slavery and on the subject of the doublefaced dealings of transatlantic governments with our own, is not a specimen of admirable and impregnable logic. Indeed, the unavoidable nature of his facts and most of his inferences nowhere more clearly appears than in the failure of his critics to point out a single error or misstatement. His speech represented a vast labor of great value, in extracting the pith of hundreds of the chief official documents relating to our war, and dovetailing their key sentences. Nevertheless, it was undoubtedly very independent, very American, and in very bad taste, to take a funeral eulogy for the occasion of a political diatribe. Though was lauding the land of the Montezumas. We offer Army, and confirmed by the Senate.

the things said were true, it was not right thus to have set them down. It was specially discourteous to tilt against the policy of foreign powers before their representatives, who were present as invited guests. Nevertheless, to declare, as the London Times does, that this was a studious and contrived insult, that the diplomatic body was "entrapped into a hall of Congress" for the purpose of being abused, is a stupid confusion of motives and facts, such as an Englishman only can be guilty of. The fact is that Americans are not intentionally insulting, either in private or in pub-Their faults, on such occasions, are carelessness want of decorum, disregard for propriety and formality. Nearly all our legislation is heedless. Many of our public celebrations are so. And we would almost venture to declare that Mr. BANCROFT's oration was written without his knowing or caring whether the diplomatic corps was to be present, while, on the other hand, the committee who invited that body doubtless had not the slightest idea, till it was delivered, what Mr. Bancroff's oration was about. Indeed, they probably thought it was to be about President LIN-

Such absurd paragraphs as that of the Opinion Nationale, already quoted, show how differently public ceremonials are regarded in other countries and in ours. Here, even what Mr. JOHNSON or Mr. SEWARD says, is of comparatively little importance-still less what an unofficial personage like Mr. BANCROFT may say. We all forgot what he said ten days later; while, across the water, it appears to have brought on hos tilities (as true as the newspapers) between Austria and America. Still more absurd are the comments of the London Times. With what an irresistibly comic air does that sheet talk of BANCROFT's "vilifying the "country whose language he was speaking!" Pray, Mr. BANCROFT, what right have you to use the Queen's Henglish? You seem to employ that language as familiarly as if it were that of your own country. It's the most outrageous case of national theft that was ever heard of. Declaim in your own vernacular, henceforth, Mr. B., if you please. let us see if we cannot have an international copyright (or, perhaps, a stamp-act or tax?) on this wholesale plundering of the English tongue by the American people!

Not least amusing among the commentaries on Mr. BANCROFT'S speech is an English one which announces that that orator is an excellent representative of New England literary men, and New England ideas and style of thought! A greater absurdity could not well be imagined. Not to go further into the subject, however, it may in general be said that the unseasonableness of uttering the truths respecting foreign nations which have excited so much irascible comment. was quite evident to most of our countrymen at the time. The same criticism, however, is equally applicable to the domestic parts of the oration-for, though the London Times says it was chiefly devoted to abusing England, we all know that the English question occupied less than a tenth part of the whole. say the same objection, that of being a political thesis rather than a funeral eulogy, applied to the whole oration. Had it been published as a magazine article, under the title of the "War of Secession," nobody would have suspected Mr. LINCOLN's name of receiv ing undue prominence. And, indeed, as, in what the orator did say of our "first American," he exhibited no special facility at analysis of character, and fell far below the mark of enthusiastic appreciation of his subject, we were almost glad (except on the score of bad taste) that he chose to give us something lively and vigorous. But it certainly had a historic ring about it quite as genuine as that of some of the author's previous productions. Bitter, personal, and malapropos as it was, it was substantially true, so far as its statements of fact went-though not always accurate in opinion. To add to the awkwardness of the affair, while some of the diplomats were cooped up in their "reserved seats," like miserable sinners in church-pews, who hear their condemnation from the pulpit in good round phrases-prevented either from defending themselves or from escaping down the aisle in front of the congregation-meanwhile, we say, the person of all others for whom a toothsome posset was prepared, was left outside! Seffor ROMERO, from the Mexican Republic, lost his ticket; the Cerberus at the

this fact as comfort to the foreign nations who are going to break with us on account of Mr. BANCROFT'S oratory. Their representatives hardly wanted to get out as much as Señor Romero wanted to get in. What a pity that Sir F. BRUCE could not have slipped away, and accommodated the other gentleman with FEW acts of military legislation will be received with more gratitude by the friends of fallen heroes than the propositions to pay proper respect to the re-mains of those who were killed in battle and hastily interred in shallow graves. The exigencies of campaigning often prevented anything more than the hastiest burial, and no word or thought of obsequies. The noble cemeteries at Gettysburgh, Andersonville, Murfreesboro' and elsewhere, show that we are not unmindful of the rites that are due to the heroic dead. The new Army bill authorizes the President to appoint for the national cemeteries a superintendent, with the rank, pay and emolument of an ordnance sergeant, to be selected from those non-commissioned officers, Regular or Volunteer, who have received certificates of meritorious service during the war. And, on Wednesday, in the House, the Committee on Military Affairs was instructed to consider the propriety of making an appropriation to complete the work in gurated by General THOMAS and other officers, "of disinterring and gathering into National cemeteries the soldiers who gave their lives for the salvation of the Union." We trust that this committee will complete the work once intrusted to the Bureau of Burials in the Quartermaster's Department, and not only provide the places and methods of interment, but give the country some carefully-prepared record of the numbers who fell on hard-fought fields, or laid down to die alone on the wayside.

In tactical, as well as in other literature, of the making of books there is no end. Yet, upon the whole, very few treatises on tactics have been preva-lent in our National military system. Steuben and some unauthorized miscellaneous books gave way to SCOTT, who first got the lighter French movements into shape for our Army to use them. That officer and one or two Boards revised these French tactics again. HARDEE'S tactics came, long afterward, from the same source, and CASEY followed HARDEE. Morris makes an ingenious book, which shows how one can "cut accross" from one corner of a geometrical figure to another, without marching in due rectangular style around the whole perimeter. He has at least the merit of recording what he saw performed or himself performed, in actual campaign, and some-times under fire. How well his system will do for substitution for the old tactics is a question much discussed. But a new champion appears in the field. A resolution was lately offered in the House, and adopted too, which instructed the Committee on Military Affairs to inquire into the expediency of purchasing for the use of the Army a certain number of copies of a work on infantry tactics prepared by Colonel JAMES DUGAN. We shall await with interest their report.

MR. JOHN P. HALE, our Minister at Madrid, has been writing reminders to some members of Congress that his present annual pittance-$12,000 in gold-is too trifling for him, and that he would like them to get it increased. Mr. HALE was for many years a well-known Senator from New Hampshire, of whom we chiefly recollect that he was considered a great wit. In the Congressional reports, after his remarks were almost invariably written the parenthesis "(Laughter)". We presume his present utterance will be received in the same way. It is a pretty cool joke for the season and the state of the country. Spain has been a centre of attraction of late, but this is the first time we have heard anything noticeable from Minister

Ir is believed that all the United States colored troops will be withdrawn from the interior of the Southern States so soon as other troops can be substituted in their place, and those that the Government has determined to hold until the expiration of their respective terms of en-listment will, doubtless, be transferred to duty on the Western frontier.

WE shall publish next week a long list of Second Lieutenants, appointe I to fill vacancies in the Regular ARMY GAZETTE.

It appears that the memor-n "sixty-eight"—belonging to various American vessels burned the pirate Shenandoah—were landed on the Ascension Islands, bout any provision for their support, and were found in a destitute dition by the Barane, and taken to Honolulu. The bill is for $3,530 in gold, and is certified to by the United States Com $3,530 in gold, and is certified to by the United States Consul at that port, who says that the seamen reached there on the 18th of November last in a state of great destitution. He considers the charge a very reasonable one. The Secretary thinks it should be promptly paid; but as he has no funds at his command for doing so, he asks a special appropriation from Congress. The matter has been referred to the Committee on Commerce.

On Thursday of last week, says the Baltimore American, the in-habitants of Annapolis were stirred from their wonted quiet by the visit officially made of the Governor of Maryland to the Naval Acad-emy, and his reception there by Rear-Admiral Porter, and the numerous interesting incidents numerous interesting incidents accompanying the ceremonies of the occasion. Upon the entrance of the Governor and his suite upon the grounds of the Naval Academy the Marine Corps and the midshipmen were found drawn up in line. The customary salutations from the corps, by peals of artillery and inspiring music, honored their arrival. Admiral Porter, sustained by his staff, advanced and suitably acknowledged the presence of the Governor and his suite. A review was then had of the midshipmen, whose proficiency in their mechanical command of the workings of a vessel and the various parts of the rigging, was further manifested by their execution of the simple command, "Strip the ship!" In the performance of this duty there was presented an attractive and exciting scene, as the youthful forms of the midshipmen almost covered the vessel, from the deck to the loftiest rigging and spar. Upon the approach of darkness a sumptuous entertainment was provided by the Admiral at his headquarters for his assembled guests, which concluded the happy ceremonies of the day. ous interesting incidents and Upon the entrance of t incidents accompanying the cerem-trance of the Governor and his sui

FOURTH BRIGADE.—In obedience to General Orders No. 1, from brigade headquarters, the officers of this brigade assembled at the armory of the Twenty-second regiment for drill, on the evening of the 15th inst. Brigadier-General Lloyd Aspinwall, commanding the brigade, conducted the drill, assisted by his staff, all of whom were brigade, conducted the drill, assisted by his staff, all of whom were present. The movements were in the second part of the evolutions of a brigade. The line was composed of four skeleton battalions, each battalion being composed of four skeleton companies in single rank. The officers of the Fourth regiment, Colonel H. D. Hull commanding, were on the right, the officers of the Seventy-ninth being consolidated with them for the purpose of forming a battalion. The officers of the Eleventh were next in line, under command of Colonel J. Maidhof—Lieutenant-Colonel Lux and the Major being also present. The officers of this regiment turned out in larger numbers than those of any other regiment of the brigade. The Twenty-second regiment was third in line, Colonel J. F. Cox being in command, Lieutenant-Colonel Post assisting him. The fourth and left battalion was composed of the officers of the Sixty-ninth and Ninety-fifth regiments, under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Frank McElroy. The General gave his commands in a clear and concise manner, and used General gave his commands in a clear and concise manner, as General gave his commands in a clear and concise manner, and used his staff to see that the movements were properly executed. In too many instances officers on the staffs of general officers of the National Guard think it is entirely unnecessary for them to know anything about the formation of a line or the movements of troops, provided they can make a good appearance on horseback. Captain Brown, of the General's staff, showed himself to be an efficient and competent that of officers although in this connection we must not expert to went to the connection we must not expert to the connection to the connection we must not expert to the connection we must not expert to the connection we must not expert to the connection we connect the connection we can be a connected to the connection where the connected to the connection we connected the connected to the connec the General's staff, showed himself to be an efficient and competent staff officer, although in this connection we must not omit to mention Major Taylor, the brigade inspector, who also assisted in carrying out the General's orders. In closing column by division on first division first battalion right in front, each of the colonels should ploy his battalion from a halt in rear of its right division, which, in each battalion, except the one on the right, will, pending the execution of the movement, stand faced to the flank. Each battalion thus formed in mass will, at the command of the colonel, put itself in march directing itself to the rear toward its point of entrance into the ge directing itself to the rear toward its point of entrance into the general column. Again, in the deployment of column after the line has been formed of columns of battalion closed in mass, each battalion should be deployed according to the principles laid down in par. 555, et seq., School of the Battalion. The movement was correctly performed by all except the left battalion. The advance in line, and in fact all the evolutions during the drill, were very well executed. If the regimental officers will make a proper use of the instructions they have received, the field day of the Fourth brigade will be one well worth witnessing. General Aspinwall, although the latest commis-sioned general officer in our State, has a thorough appreciation of the duties of his position, and is determined to spare no effort to put his brigade in good condition.

PARADE ON St. PATRICK'S DAY.—The birthday of Ireland's patron saint was celebrated this year by the parade of four of the Militia infantry regiments, several detatched companies of infantry and cavalry, and a host of civic societies. But although these latter paraded with full ranks, it is not in our province to speak of them. paraded with full ranks, it is not in our province to speak of them. The military portion of the procession was under the command of Colonel McMahon, of the Sixty-ninth Regiment, N. G., late Brevet Major-General, U. S. V. The line was formed on East Broadway, and, having broke into column, took up the following line of march: Down East Broadway and Chatham street to the east gate of the Park, where the procession passed in review before the Mayor and Common Council; thence up Broadway to Fourteenth street, passing council washington; status, down Fourteenth street, passing around Washington's statue; down Fourteenth street to Eighth avenue, up Eighth avenue to Twenty-third street, across Twenty third street to First avenue, down First avenue to Eighth street. The head of the column, preceded by the Broadway squad of policemen, reached the Park at five minutes to one o'clock. Each regiment was accompanied by their band and drum corps. In passing in review the men marched well, but we think their general appearance was not up to standard. The Irish are strictly a martial people and always make good soldiers when properly organized and drilled. The Sixty-ninth was commanded by Major Thomas Clark, and made the best appearance of any of the regiments paraded, although two of the companies were without overcoats. Colonel Mc-Mahon has not yet received his commission or assumed formal com-Mahon has not yet received his commission or assumed formal command. We expect, however, that under his management the Sixty-ninth-will soon be well up in both appearance and drill. There were some 350 men in line. The Seventy-seventh was commanded by Colonel Thomas Lynch, and numbered some 200 men. This regiment presented a very uneven appearance, the companies not being equalized. It is very odd that an officer can be found who is deemed competent to command a regiment, and yet who will parade without equalizing his companies. The Ninety-fifth was commanded by Lieutenstellar of the izing his companies. The Ninety-fifth was commanded by Lieutenant-Colonel Frank McElroy, and we confess we were surprised to find that the companies in this regiment also were not equalized. This regiment paraded over 250 men. The Phenix Zouaves, who preceded the Ninety-ninth Regiment, made a very indifferent appearance, their uniform generally being in very poor order as to cleanline's. It was supposed that Colonel John O'Mahony, H. C. F. B., would be in command of his regiment, the Ninety-ninth, but the Colonel pleaded business as an excuse, and Lieutenant-Colonel Downing was in command. This regiment made a good appearance, numbering about 300 muskets. A section of battery P, First Regiment Artillery, came next, commanded by Captain Carter. This section fired a salute while the military portion of the procession was passing through the Park Cavalry Troop C, Seventieth Regiment, Captain McCarthy, made a very indifferent appearance. The men were formed in single rank, five men forming in a rank, and having the appearance of a column of sections. Companies H and D, of the First Cavalry, also paraded under the comies H and D, of the First Cavalry, also paraded under the command of Colonel D. C. Minturn. We noticed also a company who styled themselves Pungannon Volunteers of '82, but as their dress was that of themselves l'ungannon Volunteers of '82, but as their dress was that of a target company rather than an organization of the National Guard, we will not speak further of their appearance. In another portion of the procession we noticed a company of the Second Regiment in column of platoons, which made a very good appearance. We have seen so many fine companies of soldiers, all of whom were Irish, and know so well what fine soldiers the Irish make, that we are not disposed to flatter them when they make only an indifferent appearance.

COMPLIMESTARY CONCERT TO C. S. GRAFULLA.—A complimentary concert was given to C. S. Grafulla, the leader of the Seventh regiment band, at the regimental armory, on the evening of the 17th inst. The concert was held in the large drill room, which was filled with a numerous and brilliant audience of the friends of the band and inst. The concert was held in the large drill room, which was filled with a numerous and brilliant audience of the friends of the band and regiment. The programme consisted of twelve pieces, which were 1 and dered with that care and precision for which the band of the Seventh is so noted. The second piece, "Let me Dream my Life Away," a ballad by Millard; No. 8, "Der Windfang" gallop; and, No. 9, "Beauties of the Opera," selections, including parts of the ever-"Beauties of the Opera," selections, including parts of the ever-popular "Crispino e la Comare," were very enthusiastically received. The Seventh Regiment Galop, and the Quickstep dedicated to Colonel Emmons Clark, were also much admired. The concert was closed by "Auld Lang Syne." The band was in full force, and showed great faithfulness and taste in the rendering of all the pieces they played, whether military, operation, or ballad. The concert was a thorough success, and a very fitting close to the series of popular musical enter-planmants which the Grafulla has given the public during the page. tainments which the Grafulla has given the public during the pass

NINETY-SIXTH REGIMENT.-Company G, of this regiment, Captain C. Knipschild commanding, was mustered and inspected by Brigade-Major B. S. Church, on Saturday, the 10th inst., at the armory of the regiment. The muster-in of this company completes the organization of the regiment. Lieutenant-Colonel E.O. Bernet will drill the right wing, composed of Companies A, D, H, C and B, on Friday, the 23d inst., at the armory of the First regiment artillery, corner of White and Elm streets.

FOURTH REGIMENT.—A battalion drill of the right wing of this regiment was held at the armory, Seventh Avenue, corner of Thirty-fifth street, on the evening of the 19th inst. This regiment is composed at present of seven companies, three of which were drilled on posed at present of seven companies, three of which were drilled on Monday evening, and four on Wednesday. Lieutenant-Colonel Gould Thorp conducted the drill of the right wing, assisted by Major Ferguson and the regimental adjutant. The three companies composing this wing were divided for the purposes of drill into six platoons. The regiment made a very handsome appearance, and evinced a precision in drill and steadiness in the ranks which were far ahead of many older organizations. This was doubtless due to the veterans who form older organizations. This was doubtless due to the veterans who form the larger portion of this regiment. Quite a number of the men, however, wore their fez caps without the turban, which is a part of their uniform, and should not be omitted. The manual of arms was very creditably executed. We were very much pleased to notice that the sergeants had evidently been selected with reference to their proficiency and soldierly qualities. This is just as it should be, for good non-commissioned officers, properly supported, make good companies. The officers appeared to be generally well instructed in their duties, and the Sergeant Major is a good example of what a perspectively. The officers appeared to be generally well instructed in their duties, and the Sergeant-Major is a good example of what a non-commissioned staff officer should be. We noticed that when the battalion was broken from line into column some of the officers seemed at a loss whether to dress their companies to the right or left. The captain commanding the second division was in error several times on this point. When the column is formed right in front the dressing should be to the left, and when the left is in front to the right. In criving the command for the deployment of the column the Lieut in should be to the left, and when the left is in front to the right. In giving the command for the deployment of the column, the Lieuten-ant-Colonel transposed the order of the words of command, which should be: "On the first division deploy column;" and not "Deploy column on the first division." In posting markers for the deployment of a column, deployed on the first division, right in front, the guide on the left of the first subdivision should face toward the guide on the right of that division. If it is desired to change the direction of a column closed in mass, while on the march, by wheeling it to the right or left, the command is given by the colonel: "Battalion right (or left) wheel," etc. A column at half distance, right in front, is countermarched by facing it to the right and filing to the left. It is when the column is closed in mass that the battalion is faced to the when the column is closed in mass that the battalion is faced to the which the column is closed in mass that the batterion is faced to me right and left. Colonel Thorp and the officers generally gave their orders in a clear and distinct manner. The drill as a whole was a very good one, the evolutions being performed in a manner creditable to both officers and men.

THIRTY-SENENTH REGIMENT.—A battalion drill and promenads concert of this regiment took place on the evening of the 20th inst., at the State Arsenal, Seventh avenue. The crowd of spectators assembled was so great as to greatly interfere with the evolutions of the regiment. The band, which was in attendance, made a very good appearance, as also the drum corps. The regiment looked very well, but we have seen them drill much better than they did on Tuesday evening. In receiving the colors the Colonel should be at a distance and in front of the centre of the battali standard bearers took their places in the line they were to the right of their proper position, as provided by par. 44 vol. 1 Casey's Tactics. The manual was executed in a very creditable manner. We noticed in the movements generally a nervousness on the part of both officers and men, which marred many of the manceuvres. The wheels were commenced as soon as the order "Guide right" was given, instead of waiting for the order of execution. We have noticed this mistake in this regiment before, and hope that the officers will correct it. Brigadier-General Wm. Hall, to whose brigade the Thirty-seventh is attached, was present, and consented to review the battalion. We suppose that the review was not premeditated, and is, therefore, to be viewed with allowance; but we question the taste, to say nothing of the military propriety, of an officer reviewing a battalion under arms when he is in citizen's dress, with the exception of a military cap, and carries a cane. The regiment made a very fine appearance as the General passed down the lines. The staff officer, who accompanied the General, should remember that the colors were drooped as a salute to the General, and not to him, and it was, therefore, out of place for him to return the salute. As the General passed the colors they were drooped to him, which he acknowledged, but which the staff officer, who was not called upon to return it. If any salute, under the circumstances, had been proper, it should have been made with the sabre, as it is contrary to all rule for an officer whose sword is drawn to salute by raising his hat. The regiment passed in review in common time in very good style, and wheeled very well. The battalion was also marched in review at quick time, and, finally, by the flank; this last movement was evidently not intended, as it is without precedent. The drum-major was also at fault in the handling of the drum corps, which was, perhaps, owing to the size of the band, and limited space.

After the review the officers were called to the front and centr which was, perhaps, owing to the size of the band, and inneed space.

After the review the officers were called to the front and centre and addressed by General Hall, whose remarks were quite pleasing, if we can judge from the smiles which wreathed the faces of the officers.

FIFTH REGIMENT.—An election was hold at the armory of this regiment on the evening of the 20th inst. to fill the positions of first and second lieutenants in Company M, Major Joseph Hillenbrand presiding. George Strippel was elected first lieutenant, and Wm. H. Shultz second lieutenant, both of the elections being unanimous. siding. George Strippel was elected first lieutenant, and wm. H. Shults second lieutenant, both of the elections being unanimous. Lieutenant Shults was formerly a first lieutenant in the Third oavalry regiment, N. G. After the election the officers and all present were very handsomely entertained by Lieutenant Shults. The affair passed off very pleasantly, and to the satisfaction of all concerned. The Engineer Corps of this regiment gave their first annual ball on the 21st inst., at Harmonie Garden. This corps is now commanded by Sorgoant Frank Hoffman, and consists of fifteen men. This corps was organized by Colonel (then Captain) Burger in 1856, and is composed of practical engineers. The ball was an entire success, Sergeant Hoffman and the members of the corps exerting themselves to promote the erjoyment of their guests. Among those present were colonel L. Burger, commanding the regiment, Lieutenant-Colonel A. Mager, Major Jos. Hillenbrand, and also representatives of the Eleventh, Ninety-sixth and other organizations of the First Division. The dancing was continued until nearly daybreak. The Drum Corps of this regiment will give an exhibition drill and ball at the armory of the regiment on the evening of April 2d.

FIFTT-SECOND REGIMENT .- A battalion drill of this regiment was held at the State Arsenal, Portland avenue, Brooklyn, on the evening of the 20th inst. Captain A. W. Jucobs exercised the battalion, Colonel Cole being sick, and the senior captain absent. The line was formed of eight companies, Company E being consolidated, and Company C not being present. This is the last battalion drill of the region. ment for the season. We are unable, however, to notice this drill at ength, not receiving a notice of it until too late.

Parade Ground.—The following bill was introduced in the Assembly by Mr. Taylor, and will, if passed, provide a suitable parade ground for such of the regiments of the Second division as are situated in the vicinity of the City of Brooklyn:

Szo. 1. The land in Flatbush bounded north by Franklin avenue, east by Ninth street, south by lands late of David Clarkson, west by Goney Island Road, containing about 50 acres, are hereby set apart as a parade ground.

Szc. 2. Three competent persons, to be appointed Commissioners of estimate in relation to the taxing and value of the lands mentioned in the first section of this act. Commissioners to be appointed by Supreme Court upon application of the Board of Supervisors, or of any tax payer or owner of the lands within said parade ground.

Szc. 3. Commissioners to subscribe an eath to faithfully discharge their duties, make just estimates of value of the lands above described, and the loss and damage to the persons entitled thereto.

Szc. 4. Reports of said Commissioners to be filed in County Clerk's office, and notice thereof shall be published, etc., and when everything is settled, titles of said lands shall vest in Kings county as a parade ground.

Szc. 5. Upon confirmation of report, value of lands so taken shall

Sec. 5. Upon confirmation of report, value of lands so taken shall be paid for, and bonds issued, and taxes levied.

Sec. 6. Fees of Commissioners three dollars a day.

Sec. 7. Management of parade ground to be in hands of Prospect Park Commissioners.

Park Commissioners.

A bill has also been introduced for the purpose of setting apart Tompkins Square as a parade ground. We believe that the friends of the National Guard are thoroughly awake to the necessity of providing them with a suitable parade ground, and we are assured that either these bills or others of similar purport will be passed. Our regiments will then be able to drill, during the spring, by regiments and brigades, and we will feel grounded in the hone we have long and brigades, and we will feel encouraged in the hope we have long entertained of seeing a grand field day of the whole First division.

entertained of seeing a grand field day of the whole First division.

Twenty-second Redement.—At request of the Board of Officers of this regiment, the Rev. Dr. Booth, their Chaplain, delivered a sermon before the regiment, on last Sunday evening, at his church in Mercer street, near Eighth street. A majority of the officers of the regiment were present, as also the General commanding the Fourth brigade, and staff. The attendance of the members was not as large as it ought to have been. The Reverend Doctor took his text from the third verse of the second chapter of Second Epistle to Timothy—"Thou therefore endure hardness as a good soldier." His sermon was both able and eloquent, and showed that the Chaplain was not only a sound theologian, but had a very clear perception of the requiwas both able and eloquent, and showed that the Chaplain was not only a sound theologian, but had a very clear perception of the requisites of a good soldier. He combated very ably the idea that a Christian man cannot have a high sense of honor and courage, queting, as examples of Christian soldiers, the reformers of the church, and in modern times such names as Winthrop, McPherson, Stearns, Shaw, Rice, Foote, Farragut and Howard, and Havelock and Hodgson, of the English Indian service. We were particularly pleased with the Doctor's ideas on the subject of discipline, for they had the true martial ring. The reversand gontleman is evidently a member of the church militant here, and would, we doubt not, if need be, prove, as a soldier, his faithly by his works. We congratulate the Twenty-second on their Chaplain, and hope that his sermon will be printed, so that it may receive the wide circulation it deserves. The regular promenade concert of this regiment will be given at the armory, Fourteenth street, on the 24th instant, when there will be dancing. On Wednesday evening, the 28th inst., a promenade concert will be given at the armory of this regiment by the Fort Columbus band, for the purpose of aiding in establishing the soldier's library on Governor's Island, which was destroyed by fire on the 28th of January, of this year. This project is a myst worthy one, and commends itself to the patronage of our citizens. We hope that the regiments of our National Guard will take this matter in hand, and see that the soldiers at Governor's Island shall not need for books of instruction and pleasure. instruction and pleasure.

Seventy-first Regiment.—Company B, of this regiment, was, on last Tuesday evening, made the recipient of a very pleasant surprise. The company met for drill as usual, at their company armory, corner of Thirteenth street and University place, and were put through quite a severe drill by Captain Underhill, in which they acquitted themselves very creditably. When the drill had been dismissed, and the members were about to start for their respective homes, the room was suddenly filled with a bevy of pretty young ladies, under the escort of the members of Company H, Seventy-first regiment. The company, at once perceiving that they had been captured, fell in, came to a present, and finally grounded arms, in token of their subcompany, at once perceiving that they had been captured, tell in, came to a present, and finally grounded arms, in token of their submission. The floor was then cleared for dancing, which commenced at 10 o'clock r. m., the music being furnished by Gedman's band. The management of the affair was in the hands of Captains Lee, Walcott and Underhill, and Lieutenants Simmons, Benjamin and Wise, who, by their efforts, contributed in a great measure to the pleasant exercise which all research passed. pleasant ovening which all present passed.

SEVENTH REGIMENT.—A drill of the right wing of this regiment composed of Companies D, C, H, G and K, took place on the evening of the 21st instant. All the available space for that purpose was occupied by spectators, a large number of whom were ladies. Quite a number of officers of the Army were present in uniform. There were about three hundred men in line. Colonel Emmons Clark was in command. Lieutenant J. H. Liebenau, the regimental Adjutant, was present. The battalion was first exercised in the manual of arms, with fixed bayonets, all the changes of the piece being very handsomely executed. The march by the flank was excellent, as also the march in column, company and division front—all the distances besomely executed. The march by the sank was excellent, as also the march in column, company and division front—all the distances being carefully preserved. The firing was very good. In the left company, however, some few of the men fired before the order was given. This occurred two or three times. We noticed the private who commenced this squibbing and recommend that he be put in the awkward squad, as he needs setting up as well as drill in the manual. We were surprised to see that some of those who fired prematurely considered it as an injury rather than as a disgrape. After the firing cased, the comsurprised to see that some of those who fired prematurely considered it as a joke rather than as a disgrace. After the firing ceased, the command "Posts!" should be given before the battation is moved either by the flank or otherwise. The square was also formed and moved by the first and fourth front—all the movements executed were very similar to those at the previous drills, as, owing to the size of the room, these were about all that could be done. The drill was quite up to the standard, and, we think, fully equal to the previous one of this wing. A notice of the drill of the left wing will appear in our immediate our ways week. issue of next week.

MASSACHUSETTS.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S REFORT.—The report of Brigadier-General William Schouler, Adjutant-General of the State of Massachusetts, for the year 1865, has recently been handed in to the Legislature of the State. The report is quite voluminous, giving a complete roster of the regiments and batteries of Massachusetts Volunteers, with a full account of all changes and casualties which have taken place in the same during the year. It is recommended that the names of all the soldiers who served in the ranks should be published in one volume. A circular latter was issued from the Adjutant-General's office. ne. The report contains a copy of Thomas Hughes's article, "Peace on Earth," extracted from McMillan's Magazine, and General Sargent's ode, "The Return of the Standards," suggested by the parade on Forefathers' Day. During the war, Massachusetts furnished to the Army and Navy an aggregate of 159,165 men. The majority of towns and cities in the State were credited with a surplus over all calls. ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

- W. F. M.—It would be better for you to call at brigade headquarters and inquire when the notice of your election was sent to Albany. Should this not prove satisfactory, you can then write to Lieutenant-Colonel Bently, Acting Assistant Adjutant-General, Albany, who will give you any information you desire in the case.
- E. P. W.—In a Militia company, the second, third, fourth and fifth sergeants should take rank according to the date of their warrants. Your views in the case of the resignation or promotion of the second sergeant are, therefore, correct.
- J. A. McE.—Officers appointed to fill the vacancies in the Regular Army will have their rank assigned to them from the Adjutant-Gene-ral's Office. Pay will commence from the date of acceptance. Officers of the Regular Service are not mustered in, they are only required to take the cath of office.
- X.—Paragraph 1115, Revised Army Regulations, is still in force The appointment of officers in the Regular Service is made irrespect-ive of the number of men in the regiment. An officer is first ap-pointed, and then assigned to a company.

THE active revenue cutter Miami, Captain DANIEL D. TOMPKINS, has again rendered valuable service to private property as well as to the Government, having in one day rescued two vessels from a very perilous position be-side effecting a valuable and important seizure of a brig engaged in smuggling large quanti-ties of cigars, tobacco, linen, etc., from Cuba to Boston. The facts are as follows: On Saturday last, while the Miami was proceeding to sea, from Newport, a bark and brig were discovered by her, ashore on the rocks at "Castle Hill," and signals of distress flying. The Miami immediately proceeded to her assistance, and found that on beating out of the harbor they came in contact with each other, and both drifted on the rocks. They proved to be the British bark Queen of the Fleet, of Yarmouth, from Providence to St. John, N. Yarmouth, from Providence to St. John, N. B., from Newport, in ballast, and the British brig Creeus, of and for St. John, N. B., from Newport, in ballast. The brig had her foretopmast and all her head sails carried away, while the bark had lost her headstays and backropes. A correspondent, writing from the City of Mexico, gives some facts in regard to late Rebel officers now sojourning in Mexico:

GREEN, Major Hunter and Major Gray, parties just arrived overland from the frontier, with their families. Since this public announcement of the General's frauds on the frontier of Texas, other truths have come to light, and Bee and Duff and Broadwell, Chief of Cotton Bureau of the Trans-Missis-sippi Department, have also been exposed. General Slaughter represented himself as penniless when he arrived here. Since the poor Confederates who found their way here have gone one by one, scattered in their exile thousands of miles apart, General Slaughter has formed a partnership with Captain Price and W.M. Pusch, and, with a capital all paid in, this firm is creeting two steam saw-mills between Cordova and Protrero. The General has signified his intention to abandon Moxico and reënter the United States sorvice.

General Hindman occupies a pleasant home near the Alemada, and though he lives in Mexico he is a quiet citizen, and does not join in any of the revillings of these Yankee haters.
